

HECTOR HERON'S QUICK CHANGE

Photographs by
S. F. Williams, second officer

If you ever get the impression from The Review that life is a round of presentations, sunshine voyages and shipboard parties, take a look at this lot. This is Hector Heron changing a damaged propeller in a hurry

At Bandar Mashur in the Persian Gulf, after the vessel had loaded cargo, the Master (Capt. C. D. de F. Hedges) discovered an unusual athwartships shake that appeared as soon as full ahead was rung on the main engines. As the ship headed for the Far East, messages flashed back and forth trying to find her a drydock where her propeller could be inspected
